To whom it may concern:

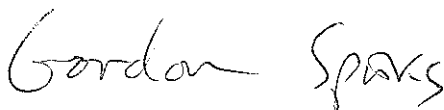

Dixon Wilson is City based firm of accountants, with an extensive portfolio of wealthy clients. Being in the business of providing professional solutions to demanding clients, we believe that we are well placed to recognise suppliers who can do the same.

When the requirement arose to upgrade our data cabling and network infrastructure in our London offices, we asked for proposals from a number of recommended infrastructure installation specialists. Comparing their responses, it was noticeable that whilst most of the installers had offered standard sales literature with little or no customisation, the exception was a company called Able Data, who had produced a complete analysis of our short and long term network requirements and designed a suitable infrastructure to precisely meet our needs. The comment from one of our IT staff was that it was the "best technical proposal that he had seen".

When we duly appointed Able Data, despite the problems associated with cabling a listed building, they installed the new system on schedule and without any interruption to our business. In fact the final cutover to the new network was seamless. Four years later we still enjoy the benefits of a glitch free, high performance network.

I would therefore highly recommend the services of Able Data to any prospective business. Not only were they properly analyse our IT requirements, but they professionally carried out a first class installation.

Yours faithfully

Gordon Spinks
